THE SURF

The irregular coastline of Ecuador offers points and beaches, reefs and river mouths facing directly into the Pacific Ocean. Many of these spots are open to swell from northerly and southerly directions.

The coast of Ecuador gets hit by all directions from which swells can be generated. The south coast faces south-west, the central coast faces west and the north coast faces northwest.

Given the curvature of the coastline, southern Ecuador has mainly right points and northern Ecuador mainly left points. In between there is a great mix of beach breaks that offer miles of empty peaks.

The best surf time in Ecuador is from January through end of May, this time of the year is when the weather is best offering glassy/offshore winds in the mornings and gets swell from the central and north Pacific.
